In the film, he was the Greek commander at the gates of the city of Troy, before the Trojan War. He is famous for one specific incident, where he is fighting against the group of women, the Greek Apsyrtus, who are trying to escape the battle and get out the gates. One of the women recognizes him as her kinsman and tells her fellow women of this fact. This fact gives them the opportunity to kill the son of Priam who is near the gates, get out, and meet up with their husbands, who are outside the walls. The women then proceed to kill the high ranking officials of the city, notably killing Odysseus, Achilles, King Agamemnon, and King Nestor. In the end, the women kill him with a poisoned arrow. Tobias the Minotaur Ian McKellen is not the same man as the hero of Oedipus Rex. In that play, he plays the part of Oedipus in the play itself. The play Oedipus Rex is by Sophocles, and it was first performed in ancient Greece. In the play, Oedipus is a Greek king who is the brother of the king of Thebes, and he is punished for marrying the king's wife, his half sister. He becomes blind and insane, and spends most of his life in the city of Corinth. In the play Oedipus Rex, Sophocles uses a character named Oedipus as the character who is the protagonist in the play. In this regard, Tobias is not a character who is really present in the play Troy. He is a figure who is used in the play Troy, but he is not the main character.
